Home Education During Coronavirus Outbreak
My child’s school has closed due to coronavirus. How can I keep them on track?

The first thing to do is to check in with your child’s teachers and school administrators. They will be able to provide you with information on what resources and support are available to you and your child while the school is closed.

You can also find educational resources, curriculum, and support form a community of experienced home educators from homeschooling groups like Homeschool Buyers Co-op.
I am concerned about my child contracting coronavirus from school, so I’ve made the decision to keep them home. What now?

As always, the first step is to contact your child’s teacher and school administrators. Even if the school remains open, they may have prepared for parents to quarantine and might be able to offer support.

You can also find support from online homeschool communities. Homeschool Buyers Co-op has educational resources, curriculum and the combined experience of over 250,000 homeschool families. There are tons of free resources, like a Facebook community that is ready and willing to answer any questions you have about home education.
How can I ensure my child continues to learn through school closures?

You are your child’s best teacher!

You kids have been learning from you from the moment they came into the world. You taught them how to tie their shoes, how to jump, how to talk, laugh and play. You are already great at this.

Trust in yourself, turn to a community to get your questions answered and know that we believe in you.

Get your tools in order!

You wouldn’t build a house without a hammer and nails. You can’t teach a child without excellent curriculum.

It is important that you find resources that have been vetted by other home educators. Check out the offerings at Homeschool Buyers Co-op. Not only has everything been rigorously evaluated for home education, but the prices cannot be beat. Period.
How can I get advice on home education?

There are millions of homeschoolers in the US, and they love to share their experiences and advice. The Homeschool Buyers Co-op Facebook community is filled with kind and insightful home education experts that would be happy to answer any questions.

If you’d like to contact the Co-op directly, please do! Our customer service team are all homeschool moms and dads who will be thrilled to help you keep your child’s education on track while your school is closed.
We are in this together!

Unforeseen forced closures of schools can create additional uncertainty and stress during an already scary time. The Homeschool Buyers Co-op Team and our community of homeschool families are standing beside you to ensure that your child’s education does not get disrupted during the coronavirus school closures.

Please reach out to us with any questions and concerns. We would also love to hear your thoughts and ideas on ways we can support parents who are concerned with schools closing or exposing their children to health risks while in school.
